The section 9.1 in the textbook covers partition and Indian independence, both of which very important topics in India's history. This source has a more in depth look at said topics covered only briefly in this section. It allows the reader to have a greater understanding of why it was so important for India to gain independence, as well as why it was so hard for Britain to give it up. This article informs the reader of reasons not mentioned in the textbook. This article also gives the reader more information on partition. Although its briefly mentioned in the textbook, partition was very important for Indian history and should be thoroughly covered. This website gives the reader very detailed information that the text only brushes on. Understanding partition is crucial in understanding the India/Pakistan split and what would have been a civil war if not for gaining independence.
